

A very rough version of an early draft of art for the story. Silberman writes: "My input was that I could not provide real statistics to support statements like '36% effective,' and I also wondered if it was a good idea to call out a specific drug, in this case Prozac."

The final version that appeared in the magazine and online:

